

Editorial Foreword

IN SELECTING articles for this Journal the subject of general physical fitness is recognized as being closely allied to Aviation Medicine. In this number appears an article by Dr. M. E. Fulk on Industrial Medicine in which the importance of thorough, standardized examinations in industry is emphasized. This article is commended not only to those interested in the industrial phase of medicine but to flight surgeons and medical examiners. There is no industry—and aeronautics is certainly an industry—in which the importance of the selection of the man for the job is more important than in aeronautics.

Further articles on this same subject will appear in the ensuing volume of this Journal and it is believed that the careful study of them will be of benefit to our readers regardless of the particular phase of industry in which they are primarily interested.
